This course is also required of all public administration majors at Florida Atlantic University. Taught from a public policy perspective, subjects covered include: public policy process, models and rulemaking; social responsibility and theories of justice; regulation of business and participation in the legislative and rulemaking environments; EEO and affirmative action; environmental regulation; and political rhetoric.
- 1/97-5/97 Public Administration in State and Local Government (Undergraduate Level)
This is an elective course offered for undergraduates in public administration at Florida Atlantic University. This course provided an overview of the role of the administrative, legal, ethical and policy making roles public administrators fulfill today in state and local government. A review of intergovernmental relations and a distinction between each level of government was a large part of the course. Additionally, current issues facing the field of public administrators at each level of government were explored.
